President's Update

Plans are moving ahead with the annual conference in Boise. Coordinating the program has been a much larger task this year because of the sheer size of the conference and collaboration with another organization. Brent Hales from CDS and Mike Taquino from Rural Sociological Society have spent many hours trying to arrange the topics in a logical order, provide useful and exciting venues, and accommodate participants' schedules. When you review the schedule, you will be impressed with the quality of the program and the relevance of the topics for all of our work. The magnitude of the conference will make it an exciting event to attend. This event, clearly, can help your practice and it is one you will not want to miss.

CDS is lining up activities for next year and invites you to consider opportunities that benefit your work and enhance your professional status. As you know, most CDS activities are organized through committees. Your participation is the main way to be involved in the organization. We have many activities underway so review the list of committees on the CDS website and join those in which you have interest. The committees will meet at the annual conference.

Renewal notices have been sent and we ask that you respond as soon as you can. There are several new ways to receive the journal so select the one that most closely fits your needs. Remember that next year so you will receive five, rather than four issues.

This year has been exciting and challenging for CDS and most other professional organizations. CDS has focused on providing more services and information to members to make it more useful in a professional capacity. These efforts will continue. The conference will provide even more services and help you advance professionally.

This is my last President's Update because my term as president ends in July. It has been exciting and an honor to serve with this reservation deadline is July 6.

Connect to the Google Calendar feature on the CDS website for the schedule.

Powerful learning grows in New Orleans' Lower Ninth Ward

In the Lower Ninth Ward of New Orleans, the devastation of Hurricane Katrina and the failure of levees and government support remain bluntly visible. amongst conference attendees. We will be using several Twitter hashtags so that attendees or others interested in the conference can share short messages.

To send tweets about the CDS-RSS Conference, use the following hashtag: #CDS-RSS; to send tweets about CDS issues, use the following hashtag: #CommDevSoc. In addition, you can tweet about specific categories or sessions at the conference and reach out to those who are not attending the conference by using hashtags such as: #ag, #farm, #localfood, #community, #rural, #philanthropy, #agritourism, #broadband, #education, #energy, #entrepreneurship, #health, #policy, and/or #youth. We also plan to provide last minute conference updates and scheduling changes via our tweets. The CDS has created a new blog and we hope members will use this new medium to share information and communicate about topics under a wide variety of categories: <http://www.comm-dev.org/index.php/easyblog>

For those of you who are new to Twitter, there are many resources to learn about how to set up an account and how to post messages (see for example: <http://www.telegraph.co.uk/travel/4698589/Twitter-how-to-set-up-your-account.html>, <http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=J0xbjIE8cPM>).

Twitter is a micro blog containing a maximum of 140 characters. Users can group posts together by topic or type by use of hashtags; words or phrases prefixed with a "#" sign. Similarly, the "@" sign followed by a username is used for mentioning or replying to specific users.

Clicking on a hashtagged word in any message shows you all other Tweets in that category. To repost a message from another Twitter user, and share it with one's own followers, the retweet function is symbolized by "RT" in the message.

Direct messages (DMs) are private. Go to www.twitter.com, pick a username and password, and you're off. Follow others by searching for user names and clicking Follow (for example @CommDevSoc). Desktop application Tweetdeck (www.tweetdeck.com)

2011 Community Capitals Institute

Community capitals and measurement; evaluating system change and engagement strategies
Monday October 10, 8 a.m. to October 11, noon in Des Moines, IA. Are you currently using the Community Capitals Framework (CCF) in your work? If so, we would like to learn about your approach and methods. This year's CCF Institute will feature several sessions on data collection, coding and analysis using the CCF in addition to the work sessions created by participants' work.

We are particularly interested in how CCF is being used to understand the impact of community change work, leadership development, and climate change. We are also interested in strategies to engage communities and organizations using the CCF. Finally, we want to bring great minds together to discuss strategies for collecting and analyzing data that can help us better understand successful community and system-level change using the CCF.

If you are interested in participating in the program, please send an abstract of your work (300-500 words) along with key words to Mary Emery by August 5, 2011.

Also watch for upcoming webinars on CCF.
